

Valentina Cuccio is currently a postdoctoral researcher at the Department of Humanities, University of Palermo. In the past years, she has been working at the Berlin School of Mind and Brain, Humboldt University, at the Department of Neuroscience, University of Parma and at the Department of Cognitive Science, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore.

Cuccio's research interests are highly interdisciplinary ranging from philosophy to neuroscience, psychology and psycholinguistics. Starting from philosophical questions about mind and language, she has been particularly interested in the study of language and cognition in pathologies such as Williams syndrome, Specific Language Impairment, Autism or Deafness.

She is currently working on the topic of language and embodiment with particular regards to the embodied nature of metaphors.